

Haiti Update 6

I'm back in the states and working on getting back to the DR/Haiti area as soon as possible. I apologize for not communicating better when I was in country, but I was unable to do so. As communicating to my family is always the number one priority for me when I'm traveling, I am sometimes able to get short and quick messages to Mary Jo. She in turn will post a brief summary of events on our website. Feel free to check the website as often as you wish. I usually try to set it up so that the home page will give you a brief situation report with the opportunity to link you to more information.

I am also going to try to keep my emails shorter for those of you who just want the basic details and will offer more to those who desire it on our website. Again, the home page will always point you to this information. Also as I have the ability, pictures will be made available on the website and we will keep all of our email updates on file on the website so if you miss one or join the network in the middle of a response, you can always go back and get caught up.

Continue to keep the Lataillade family in your prayers. They are in Miami area recuperating. They have been through quite an ordeal with Barb losing part of her leg and Patrick losing one of his arms as well as broken ribs and a collapsed lung. They will have a long road to recovery.

At this point, the number one thing we need is materials, which can be purchased in the DR and taken into Haiti. This process has already been put into motion. This doesn't require many people to operate and a DR ministry is doing the work utilizing local people who love and want to serve the Lord. This allows us to be better stewards of God's stuff!

There is also a need for medical surgeons, especially those who have trauma and ER training and experience. Basic medical supplies run out on a daily basis. Anyone wishing to donate NON OUT OF DATE medical items in the states can do so and we will transfer them down to the DR via suitcases.

I will have a broader overview and pictures posted to our website soon as well as our immediate plans.
